TIGNER v. TEXAS.

APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEALS OF TEXAS.

No. 635. Argued March 29, 1940.—Decided May 6, 1940.

1. Since farmers and stockmen are widely scattered and inured to habits of individualism and economically are in large measure dependent upon contingencies beyond their control, a legislature may reasonably believe that combinations of farmers and stockmen restraining trade in their agricultural products and livestock present no threat to the community, or, at least, that the threat is of a different order from that of combinations of industrialists and middlemen. P. 145.
 2. Since Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co., 184 U. S. 540, was decided, an impressive legislative movement bears witness to general acceptance of the view that the differences between agriculture and industry call for differentiation in the formulation of public policy. P. 145.
 3. The "laws" meant by the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment are not abstractions but are expressions of policy arising out of specific difficulties, addressed to the attainment of specific ends by the use of specific remedies. The Constitution does not require things which are different in fact or opinion to be treated in law as though they were the same. P. 147.
 4. A Texas penal statute punishing conspiracies in restraint of trade but expressly inapplicable to "agricultural products or livestock while in the hands of the producer or raiser," held consistent with the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. P. 149.
 5. In effectuating its policy with respect to combinations in restraint of trade, the Texas legislature, though exempting farmers and stockmen from penal remedies applicable to others, subjected them like others to civil penalties. Held, within legislative discretion and consistent with equal protection of the laws. P. 149.

APPEAL from a judgment which affirmed a judgment denying a petition for a writ of habeas corpus and remanding the petitioner to custody under an indictment for conspiracy.

Mr. Charles I. Francis, with whom Mr. William A. Vinson was on the brief, for appellant.

The exemption provision in the Illinois statute involved in Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co., 184 U. S. 540, was practically identical, and that case is decisive here. See also Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 32; Hayes v. Missouri, 120 U. S. 68, 71. The decisions relied on by the court below do not sustain its conclusion that "in view of the supervening economic conditions since 1902" the rule of the Connolly case is not controlling.

The object of the Texas antitrust laws is to encourage competition and prevent the evils incident to price fixing etc. Under the civil statutes, price-fixing agreements of farmers are illegal, just as are those made by others. State v. Standard Oil Co., 130 Tex. 313. Thus, the State recognizes that it is not in the public interest to permit monopolies, trusts and conspiracies in restraint of trade by any class of citizens. Yet, this politically powerful class is exempted from penalties prescribed by the criminal antitrust statutes, while all other classes are subjected thereto.

What justification in logic or in law can be offered for making an act criminal if committed by a merchant or a manufacturer but not if committed by a ranchman or farmer? No grand jury could indict these ranchmen for a criminal offense, because they are exempt from criminal prosecution. And no action under the civil antitrust statutes could be taken against them for price fixing, unless the Attorney General, an elected official, consented that such a suit be instituted. Art. 7436, Tit. 126, Vernon's Texas Civil Stats. Vol. 20, p. 638. Such a proceeding has never occurred and probably never will occur in Texas.

Economic considerations do not justify the exception of farmers and stockmen from the criminal antitrust laws. They are not excepted from the civil antitrust laws. There exists no such difference between the classes in their relation to the ultimate object of the statute as would justify the discrimination. The object of the statute is punishment for price-fixing and other forbidden acts. Ranchmen and farmers have the same relationship towards this object as appellant. The only difference is in occupations, in each of which price-fixing agreements are illegal under the civil laws.

Many business men have as little opportunity to suppress competition as farmers and stockmen, and many people are as poor. The mere fact that more farmers and stockmen live in the country than in the city, and the mere fact that as a group they may not have the same opportunities and facilities for restricting competition and controlling prices as other businessmen, are differences insufficient to justify the classification. Truax v. Corrigan, 257 U. S. 312; Hartford Steam Boiler Co. v. Harrison, 301 U. S. 459; Power Mfg. Co. v. Saunders, 274 U. S. 490; Quaker City Cab Co. v. Pennsylvania, 277 U. S. 389; Liggett Co. v. Baldrige, 278 U. S. 105; Smith v. Cahoon, 283 U. S. 553; Frost v. Corporation Comm'n, 278 U. S. 515; Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150; In re Opinion of Justices, 211 Mass. 618.

MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER delivered the opinion of the Court.

This is an appeal under § 237 (a) of the Judicial Code, as amended, 28 U. S. C. § 344, to review a judgment of the Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas sustaining the constitutionality of a Texas anti-trust law, and therefore upholding an indictment under it. Appellant was charged with participation in a conspiracy to fix the retail price of beer. Such a conspiracy is made a criminal offense by Title 19, Chapter 3, of the Texas Penal Code. Because the provisions of this law do not "apply to agricultural products or live stock in the hands of the producer or raiser," Art. 1642, Tigner challenged the validity of the entire statute and sought release in the local courts by habeas corpus. His claim has been rejected by the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals. 132 S. W. 2d 885. Essentially his contention is that the exemption granted by the Texas statute falls within the condemnation of Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co.; 184 U. S. 540, as offensive to "the equal protection of the laws" which the Fourteenth Amendment safeguards. If that case controls, appellant contends, the Texas Act cannot survive and he must go free.

The court below recognized that the exemption was identical with that deemed fatal to the Illinois statute involved in Connolly's case. But it felt that time and circumstances had drained that case of vitality, leaving it free to treat the exemption as an exercise of legislative discretion. A similar attitude has been reflected by the Supreme Court of Wisconsin, Northern Wisconsin Co-operative Tobacco Pool v. Bekkedal, 182 Wis. 571, 593; 197 N. W. 936, and appears to underlie much recent state and federal legislation. Dealing as we are with an appeal to the Constitution, the Connolly case ought not to foreclose us from considering this exemption in its own setting.

The problem, in brief, is this: May Texas promote its policy of freedom for economic enterprise by utilizing the criminal law against various forms of combination and monopoly, but exclude from criminal punishment corresponding activities of agriculture?

Legislation, both state and federal, similar to that of Texas had its origin in fear of the concentration of industrial power following the Civil War. Law was invoked to buttress the traditional system of free competition, free markets and free enterprise. Pressure for this legislation came more particularly from those who as producers, as well as consumers, constituted the most dispersed economic groups.¹ These large sections of the population—those who labored with their hands and those who worked the soil—were as a matter of economic fact in a different relation to the community from that occupied by industrial combinations. Farmers were widely scattered and inured to habits of individualism; their economic fate was in large measure dependent upon contingencies beyond their control. In these circumstances, legislators may well have thought combinations of farmers and stockmen presented no threat to the community, or, at least, the threat was of a different order from that arising through combinations of industrialists and middlemen. At all events legislation like that of Texas rested on this view, curbing industrial and commercial combinations, and did not visit the same condemnation upon collaborative efforts by farmers and stockmen because the latter were felt to have a different economic significance.²

Since Connolly's case was decided, nearly forty years ago, an impressive legislative movement bears witness to general acceptance of the view that the differences between agriculture and industry call for differentiation in the formulation of public policy. The states as well as the United States have sanctioned coöperative action by farmers; have restricted their amenability to the anti-trust laws; have relieved their organizations from taxation. See, e. g., Capper-Volstead Act, 42 Stat. 388, 7 U. S. C. § 291; Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 730, 731, 15 U. S. C. § 17; § 101 (1) of the Internal Revenue Code, 53 Stat. 33. Such expressions of legislative policy have withstood challenge in the courts. Liberty Warehouse Co. v. Tobacco Growers, 276 U. S. 71.³ Congress and the states have sometimes thought it necessary to control the supply and price of agricultural commodities within their respective spheres of jurisdiction, and the constitutional validity of these measures has been sustained. Mulford v. Smith, 307 U. S. 38; United States v. Rock Royal Co-op., 307 U. S. 533; Nebbia v. New York, 291 U. S. 502.

At the core of all these enactments lies a conception of price and production policy for agriculture very different from that which underlies the demands made upon industry and commerce by anti-trust laws.⁴ These various measures are manifestations of the fact that in our national economy agriculture expresses functions and forces different from the other elements in the total economic process. Certainly these are differences which may be acted upon by the lawmakers. The equality at which the "equal protection" clause aims is not a disembodied equality. The Fourteenth Amendment enjoins "the equal protection of the laws," and laws are not abstract propositions. They do not relate to abstract units A, B and C, but are expressions of policy arising out of specific difficulties, addressed to the attainment of specific ends by the use of specific remedies. The Constitution does not require things which are different in fact or opinion to be treated in law as though they were the same. And so we conclude that to write into law the differences between agriculture and other economic pursuits was within the power of the Texas legislature. Connolly's case has been worn away by the erosion of time, and we are of opinion that it is no longer controlling.

Another feature of Texas anti-trust legislation is relied on by Tigner to invalidate the criminal statute under which he is being prosecuted. Beginning with the first enactment in 1894, the Texas anti-trust laws have had a complicated and checkered history. At present there are two statutes directed at combination and monopoly—the one under which Tigner was indicted, and another, subjecting to civil penalties the same conduct at which the challenged criminal law is aimed. Title 126, Revised Civil Statutes. From such civil proceedings, which the Attorney General initiates, no exemption is given to farmers and stockmen. Appellant urges that the divergence between civil and criminal laws relating to the same conduct undermines the validity of the exemption in the criminal statute and thus invalidates the whole of it. This argument is but a minor variation on appellant's main theme. It amounts to a claim that differences substantial enough to permit substantive differentiation in formulating legislative policy do not permit differentiation as to remedy.

How to effectuate policy—the adaptation of means to legitimately sought ends—is one of the most intractable of legislative problems. Whether proscribed conduct is to be deterred by qui tam action or triple damages or injunction, or by criminal prosecution, or merely by defense to actions in contract, or by some, or all, of these remedies in combination, is a matter within the legislature's range of choice. Judgment on the deterrent effect of the various weapons in the armory of the law can lay little claim to scientific basis. Such judgment as yet is largely a prophecy based on meager and uninterpreted experience. How empiric the process is of adjusting remedy to policy, is shown by the history of anti-trust laws in Texas and elsewhere. The Sherman Law originally employed the injunction at the suit of the government, private action for triple damages, criminal prosecution and forfeiture. Later the injunction was made available to private suitors.⁵ In the case of combinations of common carriers the Sherman Law is qualified by the Interstate Commerce Act, Keogh v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 260 U. S. 156, and, in the case of shipping combinations, by the Merchant Marine Act, U. S. Navigation Co. v. Cunard S. S. Co., 284 U. S. 474. In its own groping efforts to deal with the problem of monopoly, the Texas legislature has in the course of nearly half a century invoked a dozen remedies.⁶ When Iowa superimposed upon its general anti-trust law an additional penalty in the case of fire insurance combinations, this Court sustained the validity of the statute. Carroll v. Greenwich Insurance Co., 199 U. S. 401.

⁵ See the Sherman Law, as amended, and supplementary enactments, in 15 U. S. C. §§ 1, 2, 4, 6, 9, 11, 15, 16, 21, 23, 25, 26.

⁶ See Nutting op. cit. supra, note 1, pp. 296-97. For the remedies now prevailing, see Texas Penal Code, Art. 1635, 1637, 1638; Revised Civil Statutes, Art. 7428-7437.

Legislation concerning economic combinations presents peculiar difficulties in the fashioning of remedies. The sensitiveness of the economic mechanism, the risks of introducing new evils in trying to stamp out old, familiar ones, the difficulties of proof within the conventional modes of procedure, the effect of shifting tides of public opinion—these and many other subtle factors must influence legislative choice. Moreover, the whole problem of deterrence is related to still wider considerations affecting the temper of the community in which law operates. The traditions of a society, the habits of obedience to law, the effectiveness of the law-enforcing agencies, are all peculiarly matters of time and place. They are thus matters within legislative competence. To say that the legislature of Texas must give to farmers complete immunity or none at all, is to say that judgment on these vexing issues precludes the view that, while the dangers from combinations of farmers and stockmen are so tenuous that civil remedies suffice to secure deterrence, they are substantial enough not to warrant entire disregard. We hold otherwise. Here, again, we must be mindful not of abstract equivalents of conduct, but of conduct in the context of actuality. Differences that permit substantive differentiations also permit differentiations of remedy. We find no constitutional bar against excluding farmers and stockmen from the criminal statute against combination and monopoly, and so holding, we conclude that there was likewise no bar against making the exemption partial rather than complete.
